does it seem like no matter what you do you just can't seem to lose weight have you ever felt like your body was actually fighting your weight loss efforts and that no matter what you did your body was determined to hold on to the weight are you frustrated by the conflicting messages about losing weight and keeping it off there is a good reason for that the advice we've been hearing from the government and health authorities for the last 40 years has been absolutely wrong we've been told a calorie is a calorie calories in calories out and eat less move more as we were simple machines rather than adaptive beings that react to the environment with every second in this book zane explains in simple terms that it's not the number of calories we eat in a day or burn off in a workout that determines fat storage but instead how our bodies respond to the type of food we eat weight loss he says is not a battle of calories but a battle of hormones he encourages us to exchange the short term diets for a lifestyle change that will give us control of our weight and control of our health

this book provides a critical multiperspective sociohistorical analysis of the role of food in postcolonial indigenous british and french settler relations drawing on archival resources from australian explorers settlers and nation builders the book argues that contemporary issues of food security sovereignty and sustainability have been significantly shaped by the colonial impact on human foodways the author goes on to enhance readers understanding of how contact between inhabitants and newcomers was shaped and informed by food and how these engagements established a modus vivendi that carries through to the present day based on the assessment of archival records it uses a comparative socio historical lens to investigate contact between indigenous and non indigenous people where the exchange of food or knowledge about food took place it finds that the transfer of food and food knowledge was multifaceted and the flow of food knowledge occurred in both directions although these exchanges were neither symmetrical nor balanced it also analyzes and discusses food as a focal point of activity the final chapter offers an assessment of the potential for the development of a sustainable nutritious tasty australian cuisine that moves beyond the tropes and stereotypical narratives embedded into colonial indigenous settler relations in the context of food if this was accepted by all australians it would allow opportunities to be created for indigenous australians to develop food products for the market that are sustainable economically viable and developed in ways that are culturally appropriate
