with many couples separating each year the question of how to determine the financial and property consequences of such separation has always been a problem area within family law should the principles be the same for married and cohabiting couples should the division of assets reflect the parties own expectations or norms imposed by society these are just two of the questions which the essays in this collection seek to explore recent cases in the house of lords have seen willingness on the part of the judges to seek out empirical studies to inform their deliberations but if the law is to engage with empirical data then much more information is needed both about the arrangements people make during their relationships and about the impact of the law when a relationship breaks down this inter disciplinary work brings together leading academics in the fields of law economics sociology and psychology in an attempt to provide some of the missing empirical information part i sets out the legal framework and identifies the importance of empirical studies for this area part ii examines how couples whether cohabitants or spouses manage their money during their relationships part iii then considers the impact that the law currently has on separating couples examining how legal principles translate into reality and what their consequences are for the parties finally part iv considers the issue of legal rationality it may be rational for the law to be shaped by patterns of behaviour but how far will individual couples allow their behaviour to be shaped by the law the way property is divided on divorce is a key issue for many families and one that has attracted considerable debate over the past two decades yet despite the importance of property division to parties negotiating the divorce transition it has been more than a decade since broad based empirical research on this issue has been conducted in australia i e settling up mcdonald 1986a to address this gap in the research data from the australian divorce transitions project are analysed to provide an insight into the way in which women and men are dividing their property when they divorce the data suggest that little has changed since the publication of settling up in the way matrimonial property is divided the future financial needs of the former spouse may however have been overlooked by parties when allocating property on divorce a shortfall that in part reflects the constraints imposed by the limited wealth available to a large minority of couples on separation
