places including Stonehenge, Carisbrook Castle and Richborough Roman Fort were open to the public in the period after the Second World War. Due to financial grounds, the National Trust took responsibility of the county houses owned by English Heritage and the Ministry of Works restricted its activities to the older monuments. It was remarkable that by 1970 the English part of the collection accounted for 300 sites visited by 5.5 million people. In 1983, under the rule of Margaret Thatcher's government and its first chairman Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, it received the name English Heritage. Furthermore, the organization performed two important tasks during his rule: first, it initiated the national system of protection of the heritage, and second, it took care of the national heritage collections. Several innovations, such as the introduction of a membership scheme and the collection of buildings such as country houses, took place in the period from 1986 to the mid-2000s. Three years ago, in 2015, the National Heritage Collection was shifted to a charitable trust.
