Inventory of the Objects in the Art Division of the Museum at South Kensington 1868 the invention of martial arts examines the media history of what we now call martial arts and argues that martial arts is a cultural construction that was born in film tv and other media it argues that martial arts exploded into popular consciousness entirely thanks to the work of media of course the book does not deny the existence of real material histories and non media dimensions in martial arts practices but it thoroughly recasts the status of such histories combining recent myth busting findings in historical martial arts research with important insights into the discontinuous character of history the widespread invention of tradition the orientalism and imagined geographies that animate many ideas about history and the frequent manipulation of history for reasons of status cultural capital private or public power politics and or financial gain in doing so the invention of martial arts argues for the primacy of media representation as key player in the emergence and spread of martial arts this argument overturns the dominant belief that real practices are primary while representations are secondary the book makes its case via historical analysis of the british media history of such eastern and western martial arts as bartitsu jujutsu judo karate tai chi and mma across a range of media from newspapers

comics and books to cartoon film and tv series as well as television adverts and music videos focusing on key but often overlooked texts such as adverts for hai karate the 1970s disco hit kung fu fighting and many other mainstream and marginal media texts
