the triangle described in this book hardly exists in reality tripartite relations among greece turkey and israel if discernible at all revolve around the crises which constantly beset the middle east and the east mediterranean even then it is not a triangle per se the three states seldom pursue a common policy this book describes the various bones of contention among the three in all possible spheres political economic religious etc as well as the areas and periods of understanding among them what emerges quite clearly is the fact that any show of unanimity among ankara athens and jerusalem was in the past likely to rest more on some temporary community of interest than on any inherent belief in the need for unanimity in his debt the first 5000 years the anthropologist david graeber put forward a new grand narrative of world history from the late bronze age onwards all across the near east and mediterranean relationships of mutual obligation were transformed into quantifiable and legally enforceable debts graeber suggests that this transformation made possible new economic institutions such as ious coinage and chattel slavery it also led to the emergence of modes of thought that have shaped eurasian philosophical and religious traditions ever since debt in the ancient mediterranean and the near east explores the implications of this theory for the history of the mediterranean and near east a distinguished group of ancient historians assesses how well graeber s interpretations fit current understandings of ancient and late antique economies at the same time this volume offers a history of premodern credit systems which takes seriously the dual nature of debt as both quantifiable economic reality and immeasurable social obligation by exploring the diverse ways in which social relationships were quantified in different ancient and late antique societies the work introduces a method of writing the history of premodern systems of exchange that departs from the currently dominant paradigm of neo institutional economics this is an open access title available under the terms of a cc by nc nd 4 0 international licence it is free to read at oxford scholarship online and offered as a free pdf download from oup and selected open access locations borderlands europe and the mediterranean middle east proposes a profound rethink of the complex relationship between europe defined here as the european union and its members and the states of the mediterranean middle east and north africa mena europe s southern neighbours these relations are examined through a borderlands prism that conceives of this interaction as of one between an empire of sorts which seeks to export its order beyond the border and the empire s southern borderlands focusing on trade relations on the one hand and the cooperation on migration borders and security on the other the book revisits the historical origins and modalities of europe s selective rule transfer to mena states the interests underwriting these policies and the complex dynamics marking the interaction between the two sides over a twenty year period 1995 2015 it shows that within a system of structurally asymmetric economic relations from which europe and mena elites benefit the most single mena governments have been co opted into the management of border and migration control where they act as europe s gatekeepers combined with specific policy choices of mena governments europe s selective expansion of its rules practices and disaggregated borders have in fact contributed to rising socio economic inequalities and the strengthening of authoritarian rule in the southern neighbourhood with europe tacitly tolerating serious violations of the rights of refugees and migrants at its fringes challenging the self proclaimed benevolent nature of european policies and the notion of fortress europe alike the findings of this study contribute to broader debates on power dependence and interdependence in the discipline of international relations
