this new edited collection brings together historians and social scientists to engage with the global history of universal basic income ubi and offer historically rich perspectives on contemporary debates about the future of work in particular the book goes beyond a genealogy of a seemingly utopian idea to explore how the meaning and reception of basic income proposals has changed over time the study of ubi provides a prism through which we can understand how different intellectual traditions political agents and policy problems have opened up space for new thinking about work and welfare at critical moments contributions range broadly across time and space from milton friedman and the debate over guaranteed income in the post war united states to the emergence of the european basic income movement in the 1980s and the politics of cash transfers in contemporary south africa taken together these chapters address comparative questions why do proposals for a guaranteed minimum income emerge at some times and recede into the background in others what kinds of problems is basic income designed to solve and how have policy proposals been shaped by changing attitudes to gender roles and the boundaries of social citizenship what role have transnational networks played in carrying ubi proposals between the global north and the global south and how does the politics of basic income vary between these contexts in short the book builds on a growing body of scholarship on ubi and lays the groundwork for a much richer understanding of the history of this radical proposal chapter 3 is available open access under a creative commons attribution 4.0 international license via link.springer.com

using cross sections of microdata from surveys of consumer finance and surveys of labour and income dynamics we document changes in the availability of time and money in canadian two parent families between 1971 and 2006 as the paid work hours of mothers have increased while long hours of paid work were mostly characteristic of higher income families during the 1970 s by 2006 over half of families supplying more than 80 paid hours are from the bottom half of the income distribution between 1994 and 2006 the largest increases in paid hours have occurred in middle and lower middle income families these families have not experienced similarly large increases in real income canadian time use data from 1992 and 2006 confirm larger increases in parental time stress for low income than for high income families since controlling income high paid work hours are negatively correlated with life satisfaction our results suggest that inequality of well being may have increased even more than inequality of income over recent decades while some policy attention has been directed at supporting incomes of modest income families with children we identify a policy gap in alleviating time pressures for these families after the first year
