following the rapid expansion of translation studies as an emergent inter discipline over recent decades demand for doctoral research opportunities is now growing fast in many countries at the same time doctoral training packages of a generic nature have been elaborated and refined at many universities drawing on long traditions of doctoral research in established disciplines a degree of consensus no doubt exists on such matters as the need for rigor method and the generation of new knowledge beyond that however there are a host of issues specific to translation and interpreting studies that remain under researched and under discussed contributors to this special issue encourage reflection on a range of issues in ways that foster further debate and collaboration on the development of doctoral studies within the field a number of concrete proposals are offered that could be adapted to local situations in different countries and academic settings while some of the contributions adopt a mainly empirical stance others adopt a broad perspective on training citing examples of widely differing projects two contributors offer insights umescence the process by which the organism is brought into the physical and psychic state necessary to insure conjugation and detumescence to some extent comes about through the spontaneous action of internal forces to that extent it is analogous to the physical and psychic changes which accompany the gradual filling of the bladder and precede its evacuation but even among animals who are by no means high in the zoölogical scale the process is more complicated than this external stimuli act at every stage arousing or heightening the process of tumescence and in normal human beings it may be said that the process is never completed without the aid of such stimuli for even in the auto erotic sphere external stimuli are still active either actually or in imagination the chief stimuli which influence tumescence and thus direct sexual choice come chiefly indeed exclusively through the four senses of touch smell hearing and sight all the phenomena of sexual selection so far as they are based externally act through these four senses 1 the reality of the influence thus exerted may be demonstrated statistically even in civilized man and it has been shown that as regards for instance eye color conjugal partners differ sensibly from the unmarried persons by whom they are surrounded when therefore we are exploring the nature of the influence which stimuli acting through the sensory channels exert on the strength and direction of the sexual impulse we are intimately concerned with the process by which the actual form and color not alone of living things generally but of our own species have been shaped and are still being shaped at the same time it is probable we are exploring the mystery which underlies all the subtle appreciations all the emotional undertones which are woven in the web of the whole world as it appeals to us through those sensory passages by which alone it can reach us we are here approaching therefore a fundamental subject of unsurpassable importance a subject which has not yet been accurately explored save at a few isolated points and one which it is therefore impossible to deal with fully and adequately yet it cannot be passed over for it enters into the whole psychology of the sexual instinct
