Markers of Psychosocial Maturation 2021-07-15 the book takes as its theme the relationship between literature and the contemporary means of production and distribution collectively termed the media in particular film and television the intention of the book is to explore and evaluate the mutual opportunities and restrictions in this relationship in the grammar of our culture there seems to be an accepted opinion that print is superior in terms of cultural production to film radio or television that to read a book is somehow a higher cultural activity than seeing a play on television or seeing a film by the same token a novel is a superior work of art to film or television the longer perspective reveals that traditionally there always is a greater respect paid to the previous mode of literary production poetry was superior to drama

poetic drama was superior to the novel and film attained cult and classic status initially over television

Called to Love 2009-04-14 love is the good we all search for and yet we have different conceptions and misconceptions about what it is ambivalence about how close we want to get to it doubts about whether we can achieve it or even deserve it some of us repeat futile patterns with intimates mates and children to the point where we may question whether we are capable of close satisfying relationships at all at times it feels as if the shadow of our parents hangs over us like a fate we cannot elude and we wonder how much do our childhoods and especially the quality of our first loving bonds determine whether we can get love right as adults

Law, Person, and Community 2017-08-31 the british and foreign bible society is one of the most illustrious christian charities in the united kingdom founded by evangelicals in the early nineteenth century and inspired by developments in printing technology its goal has always been to make bibles universally available over the past several decades though bible society has faced a radically different world especially in its work in england where the society once had a grateful and engaged reading public it now faces apathy even antipathy for its cause these days it seems no one in england wants a bible and no one wants other people telling them they should religion is supposed to be a private matter undeterred these christians attempt to spark a renewed interest in the word of god they've turned away from publishing and toward publicity to make the bible heard god's agents is a study of how religion goes public in today's world based on over three years of anthropological research matthew engelke traces how a small group of socially committed christians tackle the challenge of publicity within what they understand to be a largely secular culture in the process of telling their story he offers an insightful new way to think about the relationships between secular and religious formations our current understanding of religion needs to be complemented by greater attention to the process of generating publicity engelke argues that we are witnessing the dynamics of religious publicity which allows us to see the ways in which conceptual divides such as public private religious secular and faith knowledge are challenged and redefined by social actors on the ground
