English Law in the Age of the Black Death, 1348-1381 2001-02-01

England has traditionally been understood as a latecomer to the use of forensic medicine in death investigation lagging nearly two hundred years behind other European authorities using the coroner's inquest as a lens this book hopes to offer a fresh perspective on the process of death investigation in medieval England the central premise of this book is that medical practitioners did participate in death investigation although not in every inquest or even most and not necessarily in those investigations where we today would deem their advice most pertinent the medieval relationship with death and disease in particular shaped coroners and their jurors understanding of the inquest's medical needs and led them to conclusions that can only be understood in context of the medieval world's holistic approach to health and medicine moreover while the English resisted southern Europe's penchant for autopsies at times their findings reveal a solid understanding of internal medicine by studying cause of death in the coroner's reports this study sheds new light on subjects such as abortion by assault bubonic plague cruentation epilepsy insanity senescence and unnatural death death gender and ethnicity examines the ways in which gender and ethnicity shape the experiences of dying and bereavement taking as its focus the diversity of ways through which the universal event of death is encountered it brings together accounts of how these experiences are actually managed with analyses of a range of representations of dying and grieving in order to provide a more theoretical approach to the relationship between death gender and ethnicity though death and dying have been an increasingly important focus for academics and clinicians over the last thirty years much of this work provides little insight into the impact of gender and ethnicity on the experience the result is often a universalising representation which fails to take account of the personally unique and culturally specific experiences associated with a death drawing on a range of detailed case studies death gender and ethnicity develops a more sensitive theoretical approach which will be invaluable reading for students and practitioners in health studies sociology social work and medical anthropology
