paula hyman broadens and revises earlier analyses of jewish assimilation which depicted the jews as though they were all men by focusing on women and the domestic as well as the public realms surveying jewish accommodations to new conditions in europe and the united states in the years between 1850 and 1950 she retrieves the experience of women as reflected in their writings memoirs newspaper and journal articles and texts of speeches and finds that jewish women s patterns of assimilation differed from men s and that an examination of those differences exposes the tensions inherent in the project of jewish assimilation patterns of assimilation varied not only between men and women but also according to geographical locale and social class germany france england and the united states offered some degree of civic equality to their jewish populations and by the last third of the nineteenth century their relatively small jewish communities were generally defined by their middle class characteristics in contrast the eastern european nations contained relatively large and overwhelmingly non middle class jewish population hyman considers how these differences between east and west influenced gender norms which in turn shaped jewish women s responses to the changing conditions of the modern world and how they merged in the large communities of eastern european jewish immigrants in the united states the book concludes with an exploration of the sexual politics of jewish identity hyman argues that the frustration of jewish men at their feminization in societies in which they had achieved political equality and economic success was manifested in their criticism of and distancing from jewish women the book integrates a wide range of primary and secondary sources to incorporate jewish women s history into one of the salient themes in modern jewish history that of assimilation the book is addressed to a wide audience those with an interest in modern jewish history in women s history and in ethnic studies and all who are concerned with the experience and identity of jews in the modern world american acquisition of the philippines in 1898 became a focal point for debate on american imperialism and the course the country was to take now that the western frontier had been conquered u s military leaders in manila unequipped to understand the aspirations of the native revolutionary movement failed to respond to filipino overtures of accommodation and provoked a war with the revolutionary army back home an impressive opposition to the war developed on largely ideological grounds but in the end it was the interminable and increasingly bloody guerrilla warfare that disillusioned america in its imperialistic venture this book presents a searching exploration of the history of america s reactions to asian people politics and wars of independence book jacket historians have long debated whether the mid nineteenth century american synagogue was transplanted from central europe or represented an indigenous phenomenon alternatives to assimilation examines the reform movement in american judaism from 1840 to 1930 in an attempt to settle this issue alan silverstein describes the emergence of organizational innovations such as youth groups sisterhoods brotherhoods a professionalized rabbinate a rabbinical college and a national congregational body as evidence of jews responding uniquely to american culture in a fashion parallel to innovations in american protestant churches silverstein places the developments he traces within the context of american religious and cultural history he notes the shifting roles of american women children and ethnic groups as well as america s changing receptivity to trans atlantic cultural influences he also utilizes census records as well as congregational and national archives in synthesizing a view of the reform movement from its local temples and nationwide organizations by offering a viable response to american culture s rampant secularization and to its pressure on jews to relinquish their distinctive traditions and commitments the reform movement also inspired emerging conservative and orthodox jewish movements to offer their own constituents tangible institutional alternatives to assimilation the expulsions of german nationals from former reich territories east of the oder neisse rivers and of german minority communities from various eastern european nations following the collapse of the nazi regime in 1945 constitute one of the least appreciated consequences of the second world war numbering some ten million people this group formed nearly a fifth of the total population of the new west german state which emerged in 1949 and presented a grave threat to its early stability the state land which received the greatest number of these largely destitute expellees in proportion to its indigenous population was schleswig holstein in the years between 1945 and 1948 its population doubled this predominately agrarian area underwent severe strains in accommodating these newcomers and its handling of the expellee problem provided a bench mark for the evaluation of the assimilation process throughout the federal republic while the tracing of the assimilation of the expellees into the west german polity and society has been voluminously documented l at the national level much less research into the process has been conducted at the state and local levels the principal reason for this seems to lie in the belief that the process has been success fully completed at these lower levels and may be considered a 1 the classic treatment of the first decade and a half of the assimilation process from the national level is eugen leberg and friedrich edding eds early in this century most empirically oriented psychologists believed that all motivation was based in the physiology of a set of non nervous system tissue needs the theories of that era reflected this belief and used it in an attempt to explain an increasing number of phenomena it was not until the 1950s that it became irrefutably clear that much of human motivation is based not in these drives but rather in a set of innate psychological needs their physiological basis is less understood and as concepts these needs lend themselves more easily to psycho logical than to physiological theorizing the convergence of evidence from a variety of scholarly efforts suggests that there are three such needs self determination competence and interpersonal relatedness this book is primarily about self determination and competence with particular emphasis on the former and about the processes and structures that relate to these needs the need for interpersonal relat edness while no less important remains to be explored and the findings from those explorations will need to be integrated with the present theory to develop a broad organismic theory of human motivation thus far we have articulated self determination theory which is offered as a working theory a theory in the making to stimulate the research that will allow it to evolve further we have stated self determination theory in the form of minitheories that relate to more circumscribed domains and we have developed paradigms for testing predictions from the various minitheories assimilation was an ideology central to european expansion and colonisation an ideology which legitimised colonisation for centuries assimilation and empire shows that the aspiration for assimilation was not only driven by materialistic reasons but was also motivated by ideas the engine of assimilation was found in the combination of two powerful ideas the european philosophical conception of human perfectibility and the idea of the modern state europeans wanted to create in their empires political and cultural forms they valued and wanted to realise in their own societies but which did not yet exist salih belmessous examines three imperial experiments seventeenth and eighteenth century new france nineteenth century british australia and nineteenth and twentieth century french algeria and reveals the complex inter relationship between policies of assimilation which were driven by a desire for perfection and universality and the greatest challenge to those policies discourses of race which were based upon perceptions of difference neither colonised nor european peoples themselves were able to conform to the ideals given as the object of assimilation yet the deep links between assimilation and empire remained because at no point since the sixteenth century has the utopian project of perfection articulated through the progressive theory of history been placed seriously in question the failure of assimilation pursued through empire for both colonised and coloniser reveals the futility of the historical pursuit of perfection
