Castes and Tribes in India 1998

Although the tribes of India are a small minority with a low status and are considered politically and economically insignificant it must be borne in mind that they inhabit the land bound frontiers of the country and therefore cannot be ignored accordingly it would be good policy to keep them satisfied and well integrated with the Indian nation and thus protect India's political security it is false reasoning to believe that because they are backward and a drag on the progress of the nation they should be allowed to be oppressed and exploited and so disappear all the quicker from the confines of the country since they are a vital race and will not disappear so easily on the contrary they have increased by 22.4 percent in numbers in the last decade this indicates that the problem of their uplift and national integration must be tackled with humanity and wisdom
