Immigration and Population 2015-03-05

immigration is the primary cause of population change in developed countries and a major component of population change in many developing countries this clear and perceptive text discusses how immigration impacts population size composition and distribution the authors address major socio political issues of immigration through the lens of demography bringing demographic insights to bear on a number of pressing questions currently discussed in the media such as does immigration stimulate the economy do immigrants put an excessive strain on health care systems how does the racial and ethnic composition of immigrants challenge what it means to be american or french or german by systematically exploring demographic topics such as fertility health education and age and sex structures the book provides students of immigration with a broader understanding of the impact of immigration on populations and offers new ways to think about immigration and society

The Demographic Benefit of International Migration 2006

the view that international migration has no impact on the size of world population is a sensible one but the author argues migration from developing to more industrial countries during the past decades may have resulted in a smaller world population than the one which would have been attained had no international migration taken place for two reasons most of recent migration has been from high to low birth rate countries and migrants typically adopt and send back to their home countries models and ideas that prevail in host countries thus migrants are potential agents of the diffusion of demographic modernity that is the reduction of birth rates among nonmigrant communities left behind in origin countries this hypothesis is tested with data from morocco and turkey where most emigrants are bound for the west and egypt where they are bound for the gulf the demographic differentials encountered through migration in these three countries offer contrasted situations host countries are either more the west or less the gulf advanced in their demographic transition than the home country assuming migration changes the course of demographic transition in origin countries the author posits that it should work in two opposite directions speeding it up in morocco and turkey and slowing it down in egypt empirical evidence confirms this hypothesis time series of birth rates and migrant remittances reflecting the intensity of the relationship kept by emigrants with their home country are strongly correlated with each other correlation is negative for morocco and turkey and positive for egypt this suggests that moroccan and turkish emigration to europe has been accompanied by a fundamental change of attitudes regarding marriage and birth while egyptian migration to the gulf has not brought home innovative attitudes in this domain but rather material resources for the achievement of traditional family goals other data suggest that emigration has fostered education in morocco and turkey but not in egypt and as has been found in the literature education is the single most important determinant of demographic transition among nonmigrant populations in migrants regions of origin two broader conclusions are drawn first the acceleration of the demographic transition in morocco and turkey is correlated with migration to europe a region where low birth rates is the dominant pattern this suggests that international migration may have produced a global demographic benefit under the form of a relaxation of demographic pressures for the world as a whole second if it turns out that emigrants are conveyors of new ideas in matters related with family and education then the same may apply to a wider range of civil behavior

Population Movements and the Third World 2006-11-22 because forced migration situations are often physically dangerous and politically complicated estimates of these populations are often difficult to make estimates of forced migration vary but it is probable that there are about 23 million refugees and more than 30 million internally displaced people in order to assist specific groups of forced migrants and also to better understand the general plight of forced migrants good demographic data are needed however collecting data on forced migration presents tremendous challenges for normal data collection processes and standards to explore a range of issues about internally displaced persons and refugees the committee on population of the national research council organized a workshop on the demography of forced migration in washington d c in november 1997 the purpose of the workshop was to investigate the ways in which population and other social scientists can produce more useful demographic information about forced migrant populations and how they differ this report summarizes the background papers prepared for the meeting the presentations and the general discussion international migration prospects and policies offers a comprehensive up to date survey of global patterns of international migration and the policies employed to manage the flows it shows that international migration is not rooted in poverty or rapid population growth but in the expansion and consolidation of global markets as nations are structurally transformed by their incorporation into global markets people are displaced from traditional livelihoods and become international migrants in seeking to work abroad they do not necessarily move to the closest or richest destination but to places already connected to their countries of origin socially economically and politically when they move migrants rely heavily on social networks created by earlier waves of immigrants and in recent years professional migration brokers have become increasingly common developing countries generally benefit from international migration because migrant savings and remittances provide foreign earnings to finance balance of payments deficits and make productive investments some developing nations have gone so far as to establish programs or ministries dedicated to the export of workers developed nations in contrast focus more on the social and economic costs of immigrants and seek to reduce their numbers regulate their characteristics and limit their access to social services over time receiving nations have gravitated toward a similar set of restrictive policies yielding undocumented migration as a worldwide phenomenon globalization also creates infrastructures of transportation communication and social networks to put developed societies within reach in the latter ageing populations and segmenting markets create a persistent demand for immigrant workers all these trends are likely to intensify in the coming years to make immigration policy a key political issue in the twenty first century
