The Walk: My Journey of Survival of the Japanese Military Occupation of Manila 2016-10-14

i was invited by the bataan historical society to be part of a panel asked to present our life experiences during wwii in the philippines i came to a realization that i always found it difficult to write about the war from the time we were liberated in 1945 from the clutches of the japanese military i would jot down notes about incidents i recalled the thoughts in these notes were usually without beginnings or endings then i would get rid of them not knowing why they seemed important at the time when i was teaching tagalog at berkeley i found myself rewriting those beginnings in the tagalog language i was surprised to find myself producing streams of thoughts that had coherent beginnings and endings all of them were about the war i realized that the filipino side of me was the active speaker i am half anglo american and half filipina what did the filipina side have that made her able to speak i have decided it is time to write about that of which i had not been aware
