Assessment, Bureaucracy, and Consolidation 2015-06-09 complementation has received a great deal of attention in the past fifteen to twenty years various approaches have been used to study it and different groups of complement taking verbs have been examined the approach taken here employs analytic techniques which have not been systematically applied before to this group of temporal aspectual verbs in other works which have concentrated on these same verbs perlmutter 1968 1970 and newmeyer 1969a 1969b few insights about the semantic properties of the verbs are formalized in the present study the various verbs and their complement structures as they appear in surface forms are considered for their associated presuppositions and consequences entailments the notions of presup position and consequence are defmed and used so as to take conversational interaction into consideration this adds considerably to the information that can be obtained about the verbs in question furthermore the analysis of these temporal aspectual verbs leads to a description of their complement structures in terms of events a semantic category found to appropriately characterize the quality of most of these structures in this analysis events are described as consisting of several different temporal segments thus the sentences contained in the complements of these verbs are described as naming events each containing one or more of several possible temporal segments the aspectualizers in tum act as referentials each referring to one or another of the event segments named in their complements

The Big Book of Home Learning 1986 assessment of educational achievement whether by traditional examinations or by teachers in schools attracts considerable public interest particularly when it is associated with high stakes outcomes such as university entry or selection for employment when the individual s results do not chime with their or their teachers expectations doubts creep in about the process of assessment that has arrived at this result however educational assessment is made up of many layers of complexity which are not always clear to the general public including teachers students and parents and which are not easily understood outside of the expert assessment community these layers may be organized in highly co dependent relationships that include reliability validity human judgment and errors and the uses and interpretations of the various types of assessment no one could reasonably argue that the principles and complexities of educational assessment should be core learning in public education but there is a growing realization that trust in the uk assessment system is under some threat as the media and others sensationalize or politicize any problems that arise each year this book offers the first comprehensive overview of how the general public is considered to perceive and understand a wide variety of aspects of educational assessment and how this understanding may be improved this book was originally published as a special issue of the oxford review of education

Reading Assessment 2012-06-05 a brookings institution press and russell sage foundation publication education is one of the largest sectors of the u s economy yet scholars educators policymakers and parents do not agree about what the money spent on education really buys in particular they do not agree on how much education improves children s ability to learn or whether the things children learn in school truly improve their chances for success as adults if schooling increases how much students know and what they know does pay off later then it is important to ask what schools can do to increase students learning and earning the essays in this book report estimates of the effects of learning on earnings and other life outcomes they also examine whether particular aspects of schooling such as the age at which children begin school classroom size and curriculum or structural reform such as national or statewide examinations or school choice affect learning taken together their findings suggest that liberals are correct in saying that more investment is needed in early education that class sizes should be further reduced and that challenging national or state standards should be established but they also provide support for conservatives who ask for a more demanding curriculum and greater school choice contributors include john bishop eric hanushek james heckman christopher jencks caroline minter hoxby fred mosteller and christopher winship

Christian Home Educators' Curriculum Manual 1992 an age of accountability highlights the role of test based accountability as a policy framework in american education from 1970 to 2020 for more than half a century the quest to hold schools and educators accountable for academic achievement has relied almost exclusively on standardized assessment the theory of change embedded in almost all test based accountability programs held that assessment with stipulated consequences could lead to major improvements in schools this was accomplished politically by proclaiming lofty goals of attaining universal proficiency and closing achievement gaps which repeatedly failed to materialize but even after very clear disappointments no other policy framework has emerged to challenge its hegemony the american public today has little confidence in institutions to improve the quality of goods and services they provide especially in the public sector as a consequence many americans continue to believe that accountability remains a vital necessity even if educators and policy scholars disagree

Key Indicators of Child and Youth Well-being 2008 what is the outlook for educational reform in the united states one of the most striking proposals has been to establish a system of national standards which has raised many complex questions is it possible for the united states with its history of extreme decentralization to establish and enforce national standards for what students should know who will create these standards what would be the role of the federal state and local governments while the idea of national standards has been widely supported many respected educators doubt their value from fear that such standards will institutionalize the lowest common denominator others cite the poor performance of u s students on international tests and insist that the u s will suffer because of this poor performance the debate becomes even more intense when the question of assessment is posed is it possible to develop a national examination system tied to new standards should such tests be used to influence entry to colleges and jobs would the motivation of students to learn be increased if they knew that their performance would be reviewed by colleges and employers is it fair to set standards for students without setting standards for schools to address these and other questions this book the result of a brookings conference brings together representatives of various viewpoints on the utility and equity of increasing the use of tests for students teachers and schools the contributors are chester finn jr the edison project daniel koretz rand andrew porter wisconsin center for education research lauren resnick university of pittsburgh roy romer governor of colorado albert shanker american federation of teachers theodore r sizer brown university marshall c smith u s department of education and donald m stewart the college board brookings dialogues on public policy
