Methods and algorithms for control input placement in complex networks 2021-09-03

the control theoretic notion of controllability captures the ability to guide a systems behavior toward a desired state with a suitable choice of inputs controllability of complex networks such as traffic networks gene regulatory networks power grids etc brings many opportunities it could for instance enable improved efficiency in the functioning of a network or lead to that entirely new applicative possibilities emerge however when control theory is applied to complex networks like these several challenges arise this thesis consider some of these challenges in particular we investigate how control inputs should be placed in order to render a given network controllable at a minimum cost taking as cost function either the number of control inputs or the energy that they must exert we assume that each control input targets only one node called a driver node and is either unconstrained or unilateral a unilateral control input is one that can assume either positive or negative values but not both motivated by the many applications where unilateral controls are common we reformulate classical controllability results for this particular case into a more computationally efficient form that enables a large scale analysis we show that the unilateral controllability problem is to a high degree structural and derive theoretical lower bounds on the minimal number of unilateral control inputs from topological properties of the network similar to the bounds that exists for the minimal number of unconstrained control inputs moreover an algorithm is developed that constructs a near minimal number of control inputs for a given network when evaluated on various categories of random networks as well as a number of real world networks the algorithm often achieves the theoretical lower bounds a network can be controllable in theory but not in practice when completely unreasonable amounts of control energy are required to steer it in some direction for unconstrained control inputs we show that the control energy depends on the time constants of the modes of the network and that the closer the eigenvalues are to the imaginary axis of the complex plane the less energy is required for control we also investigate the problem of placing driver nodes such that the control energy requirements are minimized assuming that theoretical controllability is not an issue for the special case with networks having all purely imaginary eigenvalues several constructive algorithms for driver node placement are developed in order to understand what determines the control energy in the general case with arbitrary eigenvalues we define two centrality measures for the nodes based on energy flow

considerations the first centrality reflects the network impact of a node and the second the ability to control it indirectly it turns out that whether a node is suitable as driver node or not largely depends on these two qualities by combining the centralities into node rankings we obtain driver node placements that significantly reduce the control energy requirements and thereby improve the practical degree of controllability

A Guide for the Placement of the Physically Handicapped 1991

although most language programs make placement decisions on the basis of placement tests there is surprisingly little published about different contexts and systems of placement testing the present volume contains case studies of placement programs in foreign language programs at the tertiary level across the united states the different programs span the spectrum from large programs servicing hundreds of students annually to small language programs with very few students the contributions to this volume address such issues as how the size of the program presence or absence of heritage learners and population changes affect language placement decisions

A Guide for the Placement of the Physically Handicapped: Ordnance and Ordnance stores positions 2008 july 1998 a social program that relies partly on geographic decentralization for placement provides indicators helpful for identifying the program s impact on welfare an assessment of the welfare gains from a targeted social program can be seriously biased unless it takes proper account of the endogeneity of program participation bias comes from two sources of placement endogeneity the purposive targeting of the geographic areas to receive the program and the targeting of individual recipients within selected areas decentralization of program placement decisions is common because of the administrative cost of centralized placement decisions and the fact that local groups and governments are likely to be better informed about who most needs help but full decentralization is uncommon the center typically retains control of broad geographic targeting ravallion and wodon argue that partial decentralization of program placement decisions creates control and instrumental variables useful for identifying program benefits the central allocation to a local level of government is presumably based on observable indicators the central allocation will also influence the allocation to an individual but is unlikely to determine outcomes at the individual level conditional on individual program participation so with suitable controls for the welfare relevant geographic characteristics determining program placement decisions the center s allocation across areas can be used as an instrumental variable for individual participation the authors use bangladesh s food for education program to illustrate their approach a single post intervention cross sectional household survey was used to identify the impact of the program on school attendance using geographic placement at the village level as an instrument for individual program placement to deal with bias from the endogeneity of village selection the authors used a detailed community survey coordinated with the household survey to control for likely sources of heterogeneity in geographic influences on school attendance consistent with prior information on how the government targeted the program geographically they found that the programs had significant and sizable impacts on school attendance at mean points the program s incentive increased attendance by 24 percent of the maximum feasible days of schooling a regression estimator ignoring the purposive program placement was found to result in a substantial underestimation of the program s impact indeed the simplest possible control group method assuming that nonparticipants provide a valid counterfactual performed much better than a regression method treating placement as exogenous this paper a product of the development research group is part of a larger effort in the group to evaluate the impact of social programs the study was funded by the bank s research support budget under the research project policies for poor areas rpo 681 39 martin ravallion may be contacted at mravallion worldbank org electric vehicle integration in a smart microgrid environment the growing demand for energy in today s world especially in the middle east and southeast asia has been met with massive exploitation of fossil fuels resulting in an increase in environmental pollutants in order to mitigate the issues arising from conventional internal combustion engine powered vehicles there has been a considerable acceleration in the adoption of electric vehicles evs research has shown that the impact of fossil fuel use in transportation and surging demand in power owing to the growing ev charging infrastructure can potentially be minimized by smart microgrids as evs find wider acceptance with major advancements in high efficiency drivetrain and vehicle design it has become clear that there is a need for a system level understanding of energy storage and management in a microgrid environment practical issues such as fleet management coordinated operation repurposing of batteries and environmental impact of recycling and disposal need to be carefully studied in the context of an ageing grid infrastructure this book explores such a perspective with contributions from leading experts on planning analysis optimization and management of electrified transportation and the transportation infrastructure the primary purpose of this book is to capture state of the art development in smart microgrid management with ev integration and their applications it also aims to identify potential research directions and technologies that will facilitate insight generation in various domains from smart homes to smart cities and within industry
