Japan's traditional view of nature and interpretation of landscape GeoJournal 26(2):129-134, 1992 Feb by Kluwer Academic Publishers. Japan's traditional and interpretation. Senda M, Professor Kita Uoyanishimachi. Abstract: Recently a new introduction in geographical research the interpretation of landscape has been theorized in a number of ways. The work considered in this article concerns primarily Japan's traditional view of nature and interpretation of landscape. Part one: Nature, home and horizon in cross-cultural perspective. Published February 1992, Volume 1. Based on geographical and social media data, this study investigates the correlation between landscape preferences and landscape variables of different classes and then three substantially different methodological approaches or strategies were identified: 1. Holistic landscape character assessment approaches by which visual perception and the interpretation of ordinary landscapes. Geographical essays: The study of the cultural meaning of landscapes is of increasing interest in several fields. This book presents the landscape thresholds analysis as an integrated approach to landscape interpretation for planning purposes. ScienceDirect Land Use Policy Volume 119. Critical method for the interpretation of landscape. This paper attempts to address that need by suggesting one possible framework of interpretation that relates human landscape interpretation. The research is based on the principle that interpreting a cultural landscape is a geographically specific exercise that requires interrogating the role of landscape in symbolism of habitat. An interpretation of landscape in the arts by Jay Appleton. The Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism, Oxford Academic, Volume 50, Issue 1, Winter. Research article: Interpretation of the landscape by the method of visibility. Benedek Bubits, Balaton Uplands National Park Directorate, Nature Conversation Department. Mapping landscape spaces: Understanding interpretation and the use of spatial visual landscape characteristics in landscape design. Mei Liu, TU Delft Architecture and the mapping landscape spaces by means of manual and modern technology enables landscape architects to describe, understand and interpret spatial visual properties of land.
