Leaving the Pink House 2014-09-01 ladette randolph understands her life best through the houses she has inhabited from the isolated farmhouse of her childhood to the series of houses her family occupied in small towns across nebraska as her father pursued his dream of becoming a minister to the equally small houses she lived in as a single mother and graduate student houses have shaped her understanding of her place in the world and served as touchstones for a life marked by both constancy and endless cycles of change on september 12 2001 randolph and her husband bought a dilapidated farmhouse on twenty acres outside lincoln nebraska and set about gutting and rebuilding the house themselves they had nine months to complete the work the project undertaken at a time of national unrest and uncertainty led randolph to reflect on the houses of her past and the stages of her life that played out in each both painful and joyful as the couple struggles to bring the dilapidated house back to life randolph simultaneously traces the contours of a life deeply shaped by the nebraska plains where her family has lived for generations and how those roots helped her find the strength to overcome devastating losses as a young adult weaving together strands of departures and arrivals new houses and deep roots cycles of change and the cycles of the seasons leaving the pink house is a richly layered and compelling memoir of the meaning of home and family and how they can never really leave us even if we leave them

Take Me Home 2008-08-27 there is a profound crisis in the united states foster care system jill duerr berrick writes in this expertly researched passionately written book no state has passed the federally mandated child and family service review two thirds of the state systems have faced class action lawsuits demanding change and most tellingly well over half of all children who enter foster care never go home the field of child welfare has lost its way and is neglecting its fundamental responsibility to the most vulnerable children and families in america the family stories berrick weaves throughout the chapters provide a vivid backdrop for her statistics amanda raised in foster care began having children of her own while still a teen and lost them to the system when she became addicted to drugs tracy brought up by her schizophrenic single mother gave birth to the first of eight children at age fourteen and saw them all shuffled through foster care as she dealt drugs and went to prison both they and the other individuals that berrick features spent years without adequate support from social workers or the government before finally achieving a healthier life many people never do but despite the clear crisis in child welfare most calls for reform have focused on unproven prevention methods not on improving the situation for those already caught in the system berrick argues that real child welfare reform will only occur when the centerpiece of child welfare reunification permanency and foster care is reaffirmed take me home reminds us that children need long term caregivers who can help them develop and thrive when troubled parents can't change enough to permit reunification alternative permanency options must be pursued and no reform will matter for the hundreds of thousands of children entering foster care each year in america unless their experience of out of home care is considerably better than the one many now experience take me home offers prescriptions for policy change and strategies for parents social workers and judges struggling with permanency decisions readers will come away reinvigorated in their thinking about how to get children to the homes they need

No More Time 1883 the increased movement of people globally has changed the face of national and international schooling higher levels of mobility have resulted from both the willing movement of students and their families with a desire to create a better life and the forced movement of refugee families travelling away from war famine and other extreme circumstances this book explores the idea that the complex connections created by the forces of globalisation have led to a diminishing difference between what were once described as international schools and national schools by examining a selection of responses from students attending international schools in brazil the united kingdom france germany the philippines and switzerland the book discusses key issues surrounding identity and cosmopolitan senses of belonging chapters draw from current literature and recent qualitative research to highlight the concerns that students face within the international school community including social psychological and academic difficulties the interviews provide a rich and unique body of knowledge demonstrating how perceptions of identity and belonging are changing especially with affiliation to a national or a global identity the notion that international students have become global citizens through their affiliation to a global rather than a national identity exhibits a changing and potentially irreversible trend global identity in multicultural and international educational contexts will be of key interest to researchers academics and policy makers involved with international schooling and globalised education
