on january 20 2003 at 10 45 a m a massive avalanche released from tumbledown mountain in the selkirk range of british columbia tonnes of snow carried 13 members of two guided backcountry skiing groups down the 37 degree incline of a run called la traviata and buried them after a frantic hour of digging by remaining group members an unthinkable outcome became reality seven people were dead the tragedy made international news splashing photos of the seven dead canadian and us skiers on television screens and the pages of newspapers the official analysis did not specifically note guide error as a contributing factor in the accident this interpretation has been insufficient for some of the victims families the public and some members of the guiding community why did the guiding team seemingly ignore a particularly troublesome snowpack why were two groups travelling so close together were the guides adhering to best practices for terrain selection and snow stability evaluation what motivated them to go there buried is the assistant guide s story it renders an answerable truth about what happened by delving deep into the human factors that played into putting people in harm s way the story begins buried metres deep in snow and through care filled reflection emerges slowly like spring after a long winter nurturing a hopeful courageous dialogue for all who make journeys through the mountains of their life the story illustrates the peace that comes from accountability and the growth that results from understanding the canadian mountain assessment provides a first of its kind look at what we know do not know and need to know about mountain systems in canada the assessment is based on insights from first nations métis and inuit knowledges of mountains as well as findings from an extensive assessment of pertinent academic literature its inclusive knowledge co creation approach brings these multiple forms of evidence together in ways that enhance our collective understanding of mountains in canada while also respecting and maintaining the integrity of different knowledge systems the canadian mountain assessment is a text based document but also includes a variety of visual materials as well as access to video recordings of oral knowledges shared by indigenous individuals from mountain areas in canada the assessment is the result of over three years of work during which time the initiative played an important role in connecting and cultivating relationships between mountain knowledge holders from across Canada. It is the outcome of contributions from more than 80 Indigenous and non-Indigenous individuals and contains six chapters: Introduction, Mountain Environments, Mountains as Homelands, Gifts of the Mountains, Mountains Under Pressure, and Desirable Mountain Futures. By way of these chapters, the Canadian Mountain Assessment aims to enhance appreciation for the diversity and significance of mountains in Canada, to clarify challenges and opportunities for mountain systems in the country, and to motivate and inform new research relationships and actions that support the realization of desirable mountain futures. More broadly, the Canadian Mountain Assessment provides insights into applied reconciliation efforts in a knowledge assessment context and seeks to inspire similar knowledge co-creation efforts in and beyond Canada.

Years ago the Dominion of Canada stretching as it does over thousands of miles covered with dense forests watered by unnumbered rivers and dotted over with countless lakes was a land in many places as difficult of access as Siberia and its rocky mountains. The back bone of the continent were almost unknown. Stutfield first published in 1903 Climbs in the Canadian Rockies details the mountaineering adventures of Hugh Stutfield and J. Norman Collie while the two were together during various explorations in the area north of Lake Louise, Alberta. Between 1898 and 1902 Stutfield and Collie journeyed through the mountain towns, valleys and passes of the Rockies where Collie completed numerous first ascents and discovered fresh views of over the past 100 years climbers have been pushing standards in the canadian rockies from long alpine ridges to steep north faces the rockies are synonymous with cutting edge ascents peaks such as robson chephren kitchener the twins and alberta elude the many and reward the few many of the big faces were climbed between the 1960s and 1990 the golden age of alpinism in the rockies the men and women who first were part of that set high standards future alpinists read old journals and guidebooks hoping to experience what the alpine pioneers did for most the rockies require a certain edge that comes with age humiliation and failure perhaps the ones who drink the most whisky dream of the biggest peaks and sleep with snowballs in their hands are the ones rewarded with the momentary triumph of coming to a draw with one of these mountains this is not a guidebook rather it is a narrative history by the people who risked life and limb to
