how did advertising come to seem natural and ordinary to magazine readers by the end of the nineteenth century the adman in the parlor explores readers interactions with advertising during a period when not only consumption but advertising itself became established as a pleasure garvey argues that readers participation in advertising rather than top down dictation by advertisers made advertising a central part of american culture garvey s analysis interweaves such texts and artifacts as advertising trade journals magazines addressed to elite middle class and poorer readerships scrapbooks medical articles paper dolls chromolithographed trade cards and contest rules she tracks new forms of fictional realism that contained brand name references courtship stories and other fictional forms as magazines became dependant on advertising rather than sales for their revenues women s magazines led the way in making consumers of readers through the interplay of fiction editorials and advertising general magazines too saw little conflict between these different interests instead advertising and fiction came to act on one another in complex unexpected ways magazine stories illustrated the multiple desires and social meanings embodied in the purchase of a product garvey takes the bicycle as a case study and tracks how magazines mediated among competing medical commercial and feminist discourses to produce an alluring and unthreatening model of women bicycling in their stories advertising formed the national vocabulary at once invisible familiar and intrusive advertising both shaped fiction of the period and was shaped by it the adman in the parlor unearths the lively conversations among writers and advertisers about the new prevalence of advertising for mass produced nationally distributed products
