The Gathering

2010-12-14

Returning from the harrowing battlefields of the First World War's Western Front, two British soldiers, one Irish and the other English, discover that the bonds forged in the crucible of war can withstand even the tumultuous conflict between their two nations as they find themselves drawn into opposing sides during the Irish War of Independence. Both become entangled in intelligence operations for their respective causes. Amidst this newfound turmoil, each seeks solace in reclaiming their lives. After years in the pitiless trenches of Flanders, their paths diverge, yet both separately enjoy the normalcy of affectionate relationships and the simple charms of living in a small town in Cork, nestled among Ireland's picturesque rivers, valleys, and rolling hills. Within the narrative's backdrop lies a time of transition wrought primarily by the cataclysmic impact of the Great War. Duty demands an inhuman response, but amidst this struggle, the characters navigate the intricate tapestry of human connections. Although a work of fiction, this book intertwines with real historical events, offering a compelling exploration of the resilience of the human spirit against the backdrop of a transformative era.

There remains at work in both Britain and America a group of literary journalists and academics committed to the evaluative criticism of fiction. To a criticism that approaches novels as novels, the good of the novel is a collection of specially commissioned essays edited by Ray Ryan and Liam McIlvanney on the contemporary Anglophone novel, bringing together some of the most strenuous and perceptive critics of the present moment and putting them in contact with some of the finest novels of the past three decades. It examines what the novel does and what kinds of truth the novel can tell. What is it that the novel knows? What is it about the language used in a novel that creates a world different from that of drama or poetry, and how does a particular novel exemplify this? These questions can be answered by the careful examination of particular great works by strong evaluative critics: Robert MacFarlane on Hollinghurst's The Line of Beauty; Tessa Hadley examining Coetzee's Disgrace; and Ian Sansom on Roth's American Pastoral. Just some of the essays that are to be found in this insightful, intelligent, and illuminating book.
