diverse immigrant and urban poor disaster survivors lose ground to their white middleclass to affluent and black middle class homeowner neighbors during official disaster response medwinter presents analyses from 120 conversational and expert interviews with disaster responders and survivors in new york city beginning as early as twelve days after the november 2012 landfall of superstorm sandy the settings are carnarsie brooklyn and the rockaway peninsula which experienced six to eight feet of flooding the color and class blind assumptions of disaster responders and the labyrinthine process of obtaining a fema grant combine to exclude and increase the psychological burden of urban poor disaster survivors similarly the locational decisions and volunteer service perimeters uncritically replicate the segregation logics of urban spaces part of this story explains how the chronically poor repeatedly get displaced by the machinery of official disaster response one reason is the introduction of a race and class blind disaster logic of response that caters to the needs of the newly created class of disaster victims while displacing the logic of service which typically attempts to address the needs of the chronically poor as the only daughter of a successful businesswoman grace grew up with nothing but the best sheltered by her single mother and educated in an exclusive emotional devastation and physical abuse through a chance encounter grace meets mike a successful design artist who introduces her to a relationship very different from her usual one night stands and affairs with married men things take a turn for the worst however when grace s roommate walks in on her and her married personal trainer in their apartment this betraval tears apart mike and grace's romance and shatters the trust and friendship between grace and trina in the midst of torn relationships grace s mother dies in a tragic plane crash leaving grace with no one left to turn to except Life with the Trotters 1889

this impressive work is fair balanced critical and insightful choice contrary to the views of alasdair macintyre and others who assert that modern western morality is in disarray torn by incommensurable moral views john reeder believes that there is much agreement about taking and saving lives many people might in fact agree on the various circumstances in which the death of a person constitutes a violation of the right to life or that people have a right to our help especially a right to life saving aid in killing and saving reeder analyzes five sorts of situations in which we are morally permitted or even obligated to take human life e g when we repel an attacker who voluntarily forfeits the right to life when we are confronted with involuntary pursuit or material aggression when someone yields the right to life when all will die if nothing is done but some can be saved if others are killed and when there is a double effect in which we take life as a foreseen but unintended consequence of attempt to achieve a greater good reeder argues that these and closely related categories account for many of our convictions ranging from abortion to infanticide to starvation to war he also examines the concept of absolute or exceptionless right to life reeder draws on a number of moral views from theological ethics to enlightenment notions of natural rights or respect for rational creatures he does not attempt to argue for a foundation for the right not to be killed and the right to be saved rather he focuses on the content of the convictions themselves and argues that where disagreements remain such as the case of abortion they can be accounted for by the way the rights in question are explained and justified
