between the mid seventeenth and mid eighteenth centuries more than 15 000 londoners suffered sudden violent deaths while this figure includes around 3 000 who were murdered or committed suicide the vast majority of fatalities resulted from accidents in the early modern period accidental and disorderly deaths from drowning falls stabbing shooting fires explosions suffocation animals and vehicles among other causes were a regular feature of urban life and left a significant mark in the archival records of the period this book provides the first substantive critical study of the early modern accident revealing and chronicling the lives and deaths of hundreds of otherwise unknown londoners drawing on the weekly london bills of mortality parish burial registers newspapers and other related documents it examines accidents and other forms of violent death in the city with a view to understanding who among its residents encountered such events how the bureaucracy recorded and elaborated their circumstances and why they did so and what practical responses might follow through a systematic review of the character of accidents medical and social interventions and changing attitudes toward the regulation of hazards across the metropolis it establishes the historical significance of the accident and shows how as the eighteenth century progressed providential explanations gave way to a more rational viewpoint that saw certain accident events as threats to be managed rather than misfortunes to be explained additionally the book explores how knowledge of such incidents was transformed to become a recurring cultural trope in oral textual and visual narratives of metropolitan life thereby opening a window to the way in which sudden death and violent injury was understood by early modern mentalities craig spence is senior lecturer in history at bishop the forms by which a deceased person may be brought to rest are as many as there are causes of death in most societies the disposal of the corpse is accompanied by some form of celebration or ritual which may range from a simple act of deportment in solitude to the engagement of large masses of people in laborious and creative festivities in a funerary context the term ritual may be taken to represent a process that incorporates all the actions performed and thoughts expressed in connection with a dying and dead person from the preparatory pre death stages to the final deposition of the corpse and the post mortem stages of grief and commemoration the contributions presented here are focused not on the examination of different funerary practices their function and meaning but on the changes of such rituals how and when they occurred and how they may be explained based on case studies from a range of geographical regions and from different prehistoric and historical periods a range of key themes are examined concerning belief and ritual body and deposition place performance and commemoration exploring a complex web of practices
