this innovative study of vision gender and poetry traces milton s mark on shelley tennyson browning and swinburne to show how the lyric male poet achieves vision at the cost of symbolic blindness and feminisation drawing together a wide range of concerns including the use of myth the gender of the sublime the lyric fragment and the relation of pain to creativity this book is a major re evaluation of the male poet and the making of the english poetic tradition the female sublime from milton to swinburne examines the feminisation of the post miltonic male poet not through cultural history but through a series of mythic or classical figures which include philomela orpheus and sappho it recovers a disfiguring sublime imagined as an aggressive female force which feminises the male poet in an act that simultaneously deprives and energises him this book will be required reading for anyone with a serious interest in the english poetic tradition and victorian poetry this book examines the reciprocity that exists between the body and the urban built environment it will draw on archival and ethnographic research as well as an interdisciplinary literature on cultural materialism semiotics and aesthetics to challenge dualist interpretations of four different points of historical material contact in cape town south africa each chapter attends to different groups social practices and historical periods but all share the fundamental questions how does material culture reflect the way social agents make meaning through bodily contact with urban built form and how does such meaning challenge the ways bodies are objectified further how can we make sense of the historical processes embedded in the objectification of bodies without treating the social and the material the mental and the physical as separate realities

is birdsong music the most frequent answer to this question in the middle ages was resoundingly no in sung birds elizabeth eva leach traces postmedieval uses of birdsong within western musical culture she first explains why such melodious sound was not music for medieval thinkers and then goes on to consider the ontology of music the significance of comparisons between singers and birds and the relationship between art and nature as enacted by the musical performance of late medieval poetry if birdsong was not music how should we interpret the musical depiction of birdsong in human music making what does it tell us about the singers their listeners and the moral status of secular polyphony why was it the fourteenth century that saw the beginnings of this practice continued to this day in the music of messiaen and others leach explores medieval arguments about song language and rationality whose basic terms survive undiminished into the present she considers not only lyrics that have their singers voice the songs or speech of birds but also those that represent other natural nonmusical sounds such as human cries or the barks of dogs the dangerous sweetness of birdsong was invoked in discussions of musical ethics which because of the potential slippage between irrational beast and less rational woman in comparisons with rational human masculinity depict women's singing as less than fully human. Leach's argument comes full circle with the advent of sound recording: this technological revolution like its medieval equivalent, the invention of the music book, once again made the relationship between music and nature an acute preoccupation of western culture.
