The New Arab Family 2003 today roughly 70 percent of all visas for legal immigration are reserved for family members of permanent residents or american citizens family reunification policies that seek to preserve family unity during or following migration is a central pillar of current immigration law but it has existed in some form in american statutes since at least the mid nineteenth century in fictive kinship sociologist catherine lee delves into the fascinating history of family reunification to examine how and why our conceptions of family have shaped immigration the meaning of race and the way we see ourselves as a country drawing from a rich set of archival sources fictive kinship shows that even the most draconian anti immigrant laws such as the chinese exclusion act of 1882 contained provisions for family unity albeit for a limited class of immigrants arguments for uniting families separated by world war ii and the korean war also shaped immigration debates and the policies that led to the landmark 1965 immigration act lee argues that debating the contours of family offers a ready set of symbols and meanings to frame national identity and to define who counts as one of us talk about family however does not inevitably lead to more liberal immigration policies welfare reform in the 1990s for example placed limits on benefits for immigrant families and recent debates over the children of undocumented immigrants fanned petitions to rescind birthright citizenship fictive kinship shows that the centrality of family unity in the immigration discourse often limits the discussion about the goals functions and roles of immigration and prevents a broader definition of american identity too often studies of immigration policy focus on individuals or particular ethnic or racial groups with its original and wide ranging inquiry fictive kinship shifts the analysis in immigration studies toward the family a largely unrecognized but critical component in the regulation of immigrants experience in america

Indian Migrants in Tokyo 2020-10-29 what does migration look like from the inside out in the outside alice elliot decenters conventional approaches to migration by focusing on places of departure rather than arrival and rethinks migration from the perspective of those who have not yet left through an intimate ethnography of towns and villages notorious in morocco for their striking emigration to the outside elliot traces the powerful ways migration permeates life as brutal bureaucratic machinery administering hope and despair as intimate force crisscrossing kinship relations and bonds of love and care as imaginative horizon of the self and of the future challenging dominant understandings of migration and their deadly consequences by centering non migrants sharp theorizations and intimate experiences of the outside elliot recasts migration as a deeply relational entity and attends to the ethnographic conceptual and political imagination required by the constitutive relationship between migration and life

The Cultural Turn in Late Ancient Studies 2005-04-28 migration is not new in recent decades however human mobility has increased in numbers and scope and has helped fuel a global shift in the human population from predominantly rural to urban migration overall is a livelihood investment and resilience strategy it is affected by changes across multiple sectors and at varying scales and is affected by macro policies transnational networks regional conditions local demands political and social relations household options and individual desires such enhanced mobility changes in populations and communities in both sending and receiving areas and the remittances that mobility generates are key elements of current transitions that have both direct and indirect consequences for forests because migration processes engage with rural populations and spaces in the tropics they inevitably affect forest resources through changes in use and management yet links between forests and migration have been overlooked too often in the literature on migration as well as in discussions about forest based livelihoods with a focus on landscapes that include tropical forests this paper explores trends and diversities in the ways in which migration urbanization and personal remittances affect rural livelihoods and forests
