a reframing of how scientific knowledge was produced in the early modern world many accounts of the scientific revolution portray it as a time when scientists disciplined knowledge by first disciplining their own behavior according to these views scientists such as francis bacon produced certain knowledge by pacifying their emotions and concentrating on method in the interlopers vera keller rejects this emphasis on discipline and instead argues that what distinguished early modernity was a navigation away from restraint and toward the violent blending of knowledge from across society and around the globe keller follows early seventeenth century english projectors as they traversed the world pursuing outrageous entrepreneurial schemes along the way these interlopers were developing a different culture of knowledge one that aimed to take advantage of the disorder created by the rise of science and technological advances they sought to deploy the first submarine in the indian ocean raise silkworms in virginia and establish the english slave trade these projectors developed a culture of extreme risk taking uniting global capitalism with martial values of violent conquest they saw the world as a riskscape of empty spaces disposable people and unlimited resources by analyzing the disasters as well as a few successes of the interlopers she studies keller offers a new interpretation of the nature of early modern knowledge itself while many influential accounts of the period characterize european modernity as a disciplining or civilizing process the interlopers argues that early modernity instead entailed a great undisciplining that entangled capitalism colonialism and science envisioning an english empire brings together leading historians and literary scholars to reframe our understanding of the history of jamestown and the literature of empire that emerged from it the founding of an english colony at jamestown in 1607 was no isolated incident it was one event among many in the long development of the north atlantic world ireland spain morocco west africa turkey and the native federations of north america all played a role alongside the virginia company in london and english settlers on the ground english proponents of empire responded as much to fears of spanish ambitions fantasies about discovering gold and dreams of easily dominating the region s natives as they did to the grim lessons of earlier failed outposts in north america developments in trade and technology in diplomatic relations and ideology in agricultural practices and property relations were as crucial as the self consciously combative adventurers who initially set sail for the chesapeake the collection begins by exploring the initial encounters between the jamestown settlers and the powhatan indians and the relations of both these groups with london it goes on to examine the international context that defined english colonialism in this period relations with spain the turks north africa and ireland finally it turns to the ways both settlers and natives were transformed over the course of the seventeenth century considering conflicts and exchanges over food property slavery
