an emerging market economy is an economy that is transitioning into a developed economy. Emerging market economies typically feature a unified currency, stock market, and banking system.

what is an emerging market? there is no official definition of an emerging market. the IMF World Economic Outlook classifies 39 economies as advanced based on such factors as high per capita income, exports of diversified goods and services, and greater integration into the global financial system.

emerging and developing economies ten years after the global recession. M. Ayhan Kose and Franziska Ohnsorge. JEL Classification: F36, F44, G01, E60. Keywords: economic integration, international business cycles.

an emerging market or an emerging country or an emerging economy is a market that has some characteristics of a developed market but does not fully meet its standards. This includes markets that may become developed markets in the future.

emerging economies have accounted for almost two thirds of the world's GDP growth and more than half of new consumption over the past 15 years, yet economic performance among individual countries varies substantially.

the World Bank Global Economic Prospects report shows that the global economy is expected to expand 5.6% in 2021, the fastest post-recession pace in 80 years. However, many emerging market and developing economies continue to struggle with the COVID-19 pandemic and its aftermath.

emerging market and developing economies now account for close to 80 percent of global economic growth, almost double their share from two decades ago. Their relevance for the global economy isn't simply as centers of production or trading hubs packaging and shipping goods to advanced economies.

the global economy is increasingly influenced by the group of twenty's large emerging markets. Over the past two decades, these economies have become much more integrated with global markets and are generating larger economic spillovers to the rest of the world.

established in 1962, the Developing Economies is a multi-disciplinary development studies journal that publishes original research articles on issues relating to developing countries, transition, and emerging economies.

between 2000 and 2019, the share of emerging markets in global trade increased from 32 to 46, and their share as recipients of global foreign direct investment (FDI) from 15 to 46. Currently, most of the world's GDP growth occurs in those markets. Business opportunities are development opportunities.
