Fodor's The Complete Guide to Alaska Cruises 2019-03-26 smart meters which allow energy suppliers to get remote electricity and gas readings from households and businesses using mobile phone type signals and wireless technologies should benefit customers through savings from energy usage and efficiency in 2013 we first looked at the government s programme to roll out smart meters to 100 of uk homes and businesses by 2020 this inquiry reviewed the progress of the roll out and we have been disappointed by the ongoing policy delivery challenges which the government has failed to resolve i technical communication problems with multiple occupancy and tall buildings which should have been resolved by now ii compatibility problems between different suppliers and different meters iii a slow start to full engagement with the public on meter installation and long term use iv a delay by the government appointed communications infrastructure company which has further set back confidence in the programme iv a reluctance to improve transparency by publishing the major project authority s assessments on the smart meter programme
