this book presents information on the development of a non equilibrium approach to the study of heat and mass transfer problems using vapor liquid interfaces and demonstrates its application to a broad range of problems in the process the following peculiarities become apparent 1 at vapor condensation on the interface from gas vapor mixture non condensable components can lock up the interface surface and condensation stops completely 2 at the evolution of vapor film on the heater in superfluid helium he ii the boiling mass flux density from the vapor liquid interface is effectively zero at the macroscopic scale 3 in problems concerning the motion of he ii bridges inside capillaries filled by vapor in the presence of axial heat flux the he ii bridge cannot move from the heater as would a traditional liquid but in the opposite direction instead thus the heater attracts the superfluid helium bridge 4 the shape of liquid vapor interface at film boiling on the axis symmetric heaters immersed in liquid greatly depends on heat flux in the interface thus a new type of hydrostatic problems appears when in contrast to traditional statements the shape of the liquid vapor interface has a complex profile with a point of inflection and a smooth exit on a free liquid surface in the late 1930s a number of american women especially those allied with various peace and isolationist groups protested against the nation s entry into world war ii while their story is fairly well known margaret paton walsh reveals a far less familiar story of women who fervently felt that american intervention was absolutely necessary paton walsh recounts how the united states became involved in the war but does so through the eyes of american women who faced it as a necessary evil covering the period between 1935 and 1941 she examines how these women functioned as political actors even though they were excluded from positions of power through activism in women s organizations informal women s networks and even male dominated lobbying groups in the great debate over whether america should enter the war some women favored aid to the allies not because they hoped for war but because they hoped aid would forestall more direct u s involvement but also because they believed war was preferable to a nazi victory paton walsh shows that this activism involved some of the most prominent women of their day elizabeth cutter morrow whose son in law charles lindbergh was an isolationist spokesman supported the revision of the neutrality acts to allow the sale of arms to the allies and expressed her support in a national radio broadcast soon other women joined this debate esther brunauer of the aaup journalist dorothy thompson and organizations like the league of women voters and national women s trade union league broke from the pacifist tradition to advocate american aid for the allied cause focusing on the conflict in europe paton walsh shows how these women grasped the implications of the lend lease program for america s entry into the war but supported it nevertheless by late 1941 the women s division of the fight for freedom committee had been established no longer merely advocating aid to britain to keep american boys out of battle this organization supported direct american involvement in the war as a means of stopping nazi oppression while most historians have focused on women s pacifism paton walsh connects women more directly to world events and shows how those interventionists reformulated maternalist ideas to justify and explain their beliefs our war too is a story of american women trying to reconcile the irreconcilable to preserve both their principles and their peace it expands our understanding of women as political actors and thinkers about foreign policy as it sheds new light on american public opinion over the build up to the war
