some evangelical churches appear to be uninterested in their historical roots and so can be liturgically and doctrinally unstable perceiving this disconnection between their protestant faith and ancient christianity a number of evangelicals have abandoned protestantism for traditions that seem to be clearly rooted in the early church ken stewart argues that the evangelical tradition s track record of interaction with christian antiquity is far healthier than is often assumed he surveys five centuries of protestant engagement with the ancient church showing that christians belonging to the evangelical churches of the reformation consistently see their faith as connected to early christianity stewart explores areas of positive engagement including the lord s supper and biblical interpretation as well as areas that raise concerns such as monasticism in search of ancient roots shows that christian antiquity is the heritage of all orthodox christians and that evangelicals have the resources in their history to claim their place at the ecumenical table a must read for every person struggling with the question what does evangelicalism have to do with history leonardo de chirico director of reformanda initiative the excavations at ezinge between 1923 and 1934 are among the most famous excavations in the history of dutch archaeology the excellent preservation of organic remains especially the impressive remnants of houses from the pre roman iron age attracted a great deal of attention even during the excavations in northwestern european archaeology ezinge has for a long time been considered exemplary of a late prehistoric settlement and many publications still refer to it yet this excavation has never been published in full analysis of the wealth of data that the excavations in ezinge provided was simply too complicated the analysis and publication of the excavation results has been resumed in 2011 now with the aid of databases and handmade local pottery as a fine dating instrument this book which will be published in two volumes is written not only to reveal what was hidden in the archives it also aims at presenting new insights into the habitation history of ezinge and of terp settlements in general by combining excavation results with the findings and interpretations of modern research this first volume describes the excavation itself the salt marsh landscape that formed the natural environment of the terp settlements before embankment was undertaken in the middle ages and the way the inhabitants made a living in this extreme natural environment a major part of this volume is occupied by a catalog of excavation plans with the accompanying finds and finds descriptions volume 2 will be devoted to the buildings and the habitation history since the first settlers arrived around 500 bc and will also describe and discuss what we can learn about ritual practice and social life from the ezing findings
