The Global Weather Experiment

1981

The Global Weather Experiment is a comprehensive study of the Earth's atmosphere, focusing on the interactions between the surface and the upper atmosphere. The experiment involves a series of measurements and observations, including the use of satellites, balloons, and ground-based instruments. The data collected is used to develop and improve weather forecasting models, as well as to study the effects of climate change on the atmosphere. The experiment is a collaborative effort between scientists from various countries and institutions, and it has led to significant advances in our understanding of the atmosphere.
