The Many Silences of Love 2010-11-29 bearing in mind the assertion of monsieur de milcourt that prefaces for the most part seem only made in order to impose upon the reader a brief foreword will suffice to explain the scope of the following pages as will be apparent at a glance the selections are all from modern and largely from living poets the dominant chord is lyrical and in the general unisance the minor prevails over the major key no excuse seems called for in presenting a new anthology for given the same theme each compiler must of necessity present a different score subject to individual taste and preferences to apologize for a new anthology is but one degree less sensible than to prepare it pertinently remarks the editor of ballades and rondeaus such were but another case of qui s excuse s accuse it may be observed nevertheless that the path of the compiler is far from being strewn with flowers indeed it has been truly said that Æsop's old man and boy with the donkey had not a harder task than the maker of selections and collections of verses of recent years a number of excellent anthologies have been published on a similar theme but these deal mainly with the rhythmic fancies of the elder bards or in fewer instances combine the older and the younger schools in the present instance the editor has been guided solely by his own taste or predilections having had no recourse to other collections beyond that of avoiding excerpts too oft repeated the aim being so far as possible to include such examples of merit as are not generally familiar to the average lover of poetry whether these be by well known authors or by those who are little known has not entered into consideration the prime object being to present as intrinsically meritorious a collection by both british and american modern lyrists as is possible within the limits of the space at command the writer is not aware of a similar compilation having been previously attempted there being few who would care to brave the omissions that must naturally be thrust at one's door more especially in the case of an abstract from the works of living writers yet while fault may be found perchance on the score of selection both by those who may be excluded as well as by those who are included the editor of an anthology should at least be thanked for placing many selections before the reader that in the ordinary course of things he would miss either through lack of time or the inability to possess or consult the multitudinous volumes he would be called upon to peruse
