Transnational Identity and Diasporic Language in Junot Diaz's "The Brief Wonderous Life of Oscar Wao" 2021-04-15

junot diaz s renowned novel the brief wondrous life of oscar wao oscar wao presents the brief and wondrous life of its main character oscar wao but also describes the exceptional lives of lola and belicia his sister and mother respectively while the story s title asserts an enthusiastic tone to the lives of oscar and the females in his family the story actually reveals the victimization and demise of these characters though diaz offers the spell of fuku americanus a dominican superstition feminist theorist judith butler provides a more advantageous concrete explanation for the subjugation of these characters butler argues that culture dictates certain expectations for gender performances but also punishes the individuals who do not live up to these expectations however this project will use anzaldúa s the borderlands to complement butler in order to translate her theory to a work of latino american literature and explain how these characters may be seen as hybrids this thesis explores how díaz s novel realizes butler s postulate as the main characters do not live up to these expectations and thus are penalized the chapters in this thesis will be attributed each to one character and in this order oscar lola and belicia each chapter will encompass a thorough examination into each character s upbringing personality interpersonal and intrapersonal operations in order to account for their deviation from cultural gender expectations after each character composition is detailed the chapters will discuss how each of these factors leads to the character s downfall confirming butler s gender performativity theory finally this project concludes in showing how all three characters of differing genders and time periods as well personal identities are unable to depart from the gender roles established by dominican culture without any repercussions in the only way out katherine brewer ball explores the american fascination with the escape story brewer ball argues that escape is a key site for exploring american conceptions of freedom and constraint stories of escape are never told just once but become mythic in their episodic iterations revealing the fantasies and desires of society the storyteller and the listener while white escape narratives have typically been laden with enlightenment fantasies of redemption where freedom is available to any individual willing to seize it brewer ball explores how black and queer escape offer forms of radical possibility drawing on black studies queer theory and performance studies she examines a range of works from nineteenth century american literature to contemporary queer of color art and writing by contemporary american artists including wilmer wilson iv tourmaline tony kushner junot díaz glenn ligon toshi reagon and sharon hayes throughout escape emerges as a story not of individuality but of collectivity and entanglement

Junot Díaz’s The Brief, Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao and Its Punishment of Failed Gender Performances 2016

Abstract: This thesis explores how Junot Díaz's novel The Brief, Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao realizes Butler's postulate as the main characters do not live up to these expectations and thus are penalized. The chapters in this thesis will be attributed each to one character and in this order Oscar, Lola, and Belicia. Each chapter will encompass a thorough examination into each character's upbringing, personality, interpersonal and intrapersonal operations in order to account for their deviation from cultural gender expectations. After each character composition is detailed, the chapters will discuss how each of these factors leads to the character's downfall, confirming Butler's gender performativity theory. Finally, this project concludes in showing how all three characters of differing genders and time periods, as well as personal identities, are unable to depart from the gender roles established by Dominican culture without any repercussions.
