Tongass National Forest (N.F.), Eight Fathom Timber Sale(s) 1996 this monograph traces the history of two little known and understudied genres of classical arabic poetry namely begging and complaint sakwa poetry from their beginnings to the end of the 12th century the two genres are interrelated and have therefore been studied here in parallel begging poems are petitions in verse addressed to a patron and in which the poet poses as poor dispirited and in need of support poets describe their supposed poverty using striking yet patently unrealistic exaggerated images starved families ramshackle houses tattered clothes squalor mishaps etc with a view not only to arousing the patron s sympathy but also to amusing him complaint poetry on the other hand aired the most diverse kinds of grievances but by far the most common and therefore important were general complaints about one s times contemporaries and milieu as well as complaints about one s financial predicament the study considers only these two categories of grievances which are closely related with begging verse because the blame of one s times contemporaries and milieu centred on the supposed ignorance baseness and stinginess of the poet s coevals the disregard of culture merit and talent and the resulting misery and unprosperousness of the men of letters the study shows that since the 10th century such moans became cliched themes of contemporary poetry which poets felt obliged to include in their repertoire and which they mostly cultivated as a literary exercise it is therefore wrong to take them literally or to regard them as subversive literature besides breaking new ground in the field of classical arabic literature the book will also be of interest to comparatists
